

LAST DAY TO ENTER IN THE BABY SHOW

Books in the Luna Park Contest Will Close at 6 o'clock This Afternoon.

MANY NEW NAMES
COME IN EACH DAY

Twins Born in Different Years
Are Among Interesting Entries in the Competition.

Entries for the baby contest at Luna Park, which will be concluded tomorrow afternoon between 2 and 5 o'clock, will be closed at 6 o'clock this evening.

As the time has progressed, hundreds of names have been added to the register and a veritable army of babies is expected at the park tomorrow.

Because of the limited time it has been impossible to notify everybody who has sent in the names of the babies that their own little ones have been entered in the contest. Every name, however, which has been sent to Mr. Goodfellow at Luna Park has been entered on the books.

Hear Decisions.

It only remains for the parents to take their babies out to Luna Park tomorrow afternoon and hear the decision of the judges.

Two of the most interesting contestants for the prize for twins are Annie Bell and Emma Bell, two little twin sisters, who were born in different years. Annie was born December 31, 1895, and Emma came into the world January 1, 1896. These little girls are residents of Twining City and promise to play a strong part in the contest for twins. Their home is at 2335 Prout street.

The contest has aroused great enthusiasm, and all sections of Washington and Alexandria county are interested in the result.

The management of Luna Park has announced that all mothers and children entered in the contest will be admitted to the grounds tomorrow free of charge.

Mr. Goodfellow says the entries include some of the handsomest children in Washington, and he is confident the judges will have a hard task reaching a decision.

VACATION SHOPPING IS TIRESOME ALTHOUGH ITS HUMOR IS NOT LACKING

The woman who is doing a last bit of shopping before going away to a place where bargains cease from troubling and the shopper is at rest—which isn't necessarily heaven, though it sounds like it, but may be the Maine woods—is easily recognized by the signs she wears about her person.

First she carries a long list which contains any number of items, and second—she wears a 20-ft. unpleasant-looking I-could-not-stand-it expression and her old clothes.

One such unfortunate made her way to the counter given over to toilet articles in a shop yesterday and bought the following things:

One pint bottle of witchhazel.
One pint bottle household ammonia.
One large bottle arnica.
Four boxes soap.
Four jars cold cream.
Large bottle glycerine and rose water.
Tweezers.
Lotion warranted to cure sunburn in twenty-four hours.
Massage cream.
Mixture to soften and whiten the hands.
Farsorgic.

Still Buying.

And she was still buying when the observer had completed her own purchase of an orange-wood stick and had walked away.

There was another woman who wore the chastened air of one who with her own eyes has seen all the furniture shrouded in slippery linen covers, and has with her own hands swathed her picture and mirrors in mosquito netting, and has otherwise converted a pleasant shopping trip into a painful visit.

Now, a passion for tucking is an innocent enough thing and not an occasion for condemning anyone. But it was a tick of a hot afternoon, and no when the woman asked for tucked chiffon at the counter given over to white goods her request for it was received with a greater or less amount of disgust by the young woman in charge.

"We haven't it here," said the clerk. "Where is it, then?" asked the woman with some asperity, and rested on her left foot because her right shoe hurt, and fanned herself with her handkerchief.

Had No "Tucking."

"Probably you will find it at the lace counter," said the clerk behind the counter. "middle counter, back."

The woman took up the three small parcels which formed her burden, and putting her best foot forward, that being her left one, under the circumstances, arrived in the course of time at the lace counter, where she was waited upon by another tired-looking girl—one in blue.

"Tucking," said the woman, briefly. "Tucking," cried the girl in blue, contemptuously, as if tucking were a crime, and all who used it criminals. "Tucking! Why, we don't have it here."

The woman slipped her right shoe off her foot before she answered back. "You must have it," she remarked, doggedly. "I was told you had it at the white goods counter."

"Well, we haven't," said the girl in blue, disloyally, and her manner seemed to intimate that if they had had it they would not have had her, that she and tucking were never by any chance to be found in the same place.

"Can you give me any idea where it is to be had?" asked the woman, putting her shoe on again and wishing in her innermost heart that sandals were fashionable.

She Tried Another.

"You might try the trimming department," replied the girl in blue, as if to say that there was no knowing what trash might not creep in there, so the woman hobbled away to the trimming department and withered beneath the reproachful glance of the tired young woman here.

"I want before she answered there it is to be had," said she deprecatingly. "I'm sure it is not my wish to shop at this hour, and I had much rather be at home drinking iced tea and wearing a kimono than here, but the dressmaker must have it at once or I can't go away tomorrow."

"Indeed," said the saleswoman at the trimming department coldly. "Well, the tucking isn't kept here."

Found It Unpopular.

"Then where is it kept?" asked the woman despairingly.

"At the white-goods counter, perhaps," responded the clerk vaguely, and turned her back to speak to another late customer.

"I had no idea tucking could be so unpopular," muttered the woman, and wended her way back to the white-goods counter.

"See here," she remarked to the girl she had spoken to before, "they tell me the tucking is really here. I'm mighty sorry and if I could do without it I would, but I can't, so if you will find it and sell me a quarter of a yard, never so long as I live will I have anything trimmed with ready-made tucking again. I swear it."

"Ah," said the clerk, and produced the tucking without a blush for her former avowal that she knew nothing about it.

What she measured it off the woman slipped her shoe off her foot and fanned herself with her handkerchief. "It's an awful thing not to have a sense of humor," she mourned, and then she thought of the iced tea awaiting her and aroused herself painfully and went on her way.

Was Disappointed.

There was a girl in a certain shop the other day who passed by a pile of bolts of embroidered batiste bearing the sign "Marked down 20 cents a yard."

She paused when she saw the sign and gazed at the clerk standing nearest it with such severity that that young person trembled in her shoes.

"When were these reduced?" she asked in a regular Mrs. Siddons voice. "What size?" inquired the clerk tremulously.

"And I bought mine the day before," she cried, and passed on, evidently cut to the heart.

Two young women standing at the belt counter were buying belts. "Twenty-inch," said one young woman. "Twenty-two-inch said the other."

It was only after a long search that the girl of the required length were discovered, and then when these were tried about the waists of their respective purchasers neither would meet by two inches. It was then that two shamed young women took humbly the twenty-four and twenty-two-inch articles proffered by the saleswoman, and went away with their own ideas about their diminutiveness sadly disarranged.

NOT A DISCOVERY.

"Now, what shall we name the baby?" inquired the professor's wife.

"Why, this species has been named," answered the professor in astonishment. "This is a primate mammal, homo sapiens."—Exchange.
